Minimize Burdens, Maximize Returns

While owning oil and gas mineral rights can be a positive — and at times profitable — experience, it can also present complex challenges and burdensome administrative obligations. This is especially true when mineral rights portfolios consist of numerous holdings across multiple counties and states.

At Bessemer Trust, our experienced oil and gas advisors can help you to address the many questions you may have about your mineral rights.

Do you own mineral rights? Have you identified all of them? Are any of them producing right now? Are you receiving all the revenues you're entitled to? Would it make sense to transfer your rights into a trust? If you decide to sell your rights, how much are they worth? If you've received a lease proposal, how can you determine if it's a good offer?

How We Work With You

Whether it's providing administrative oversight of your holdings, identifying and recovering revenues, seeking the best possible terms when new leasing opportunities arise, or any of the many and often complicated issues associated with mineral rights holdings, we can help to minimize your burdens and maximize your returns.

Land management. Many people own mineral rights because they've been passed down through their family over generations — and they may not have the expertise, time, or inclination to manage their rights effectively. Sometimes, these rights are associated with a single property. Often, however, mineral rights portfolios consist of numerous geographically scattered holdings. The complexity involved in managing these portfolios can be staggering. Even if it were possible to inspect, physically, each of the sites, the fact that no oil or gas wells are visible on the surface doesn't necessarily mean that no production is occurring, since horizontal (or directional) drilling from offset locations is now commonplace. Analyzing digital data resource maps, county tax rolls, states' unclaimed money funds, and other resources, we can determine whether your mineral rights have been tapped and, if so, take the necessary steps to enforce lease terms, recover past revenues, and bring you into the payment stream.

Accounting/back-office services. Depending upon your needs, we can assist you with any or all of a full range of back-office services — including bookkeeping, monitoring expenses and revenue distributions, payment of invoices, and the many other administrative obligations of owning mineral rights.

Advisory services. We provide in-depth reviews of oil and gas portfolios, leases, and lease proposals. We can negotiate leases and contracts on your behalf, market unleased mineral interests for lease, and provide advice on asset sales. In addition, we can coordinate with our estate planning and tax experts — and your other advisors — to help determine the best ownership structure for your assets.
